Wreck-It Ralph" characters and use their particular power ups to crash and destroy the obstacles and get to the next part of the track. Sugar Rush is intended to be played in browser, and therefore features smaller mobile graphics and limited features compared to the original console game. Official app The official Sugar Rush mobile game was announced on March 8, 2012, alongside the development of the Sugar Rush website. The game was developed by Sugar Rush Studios, and is based on the Sugar Rush website. The game was released for iOS devices in 2012, on September 12, 2012. A version for Android was released on February 11, 2013. Development According to the developer, Sugar Rush originally started as a web series called the Wreck-It Ralph website. That website became a game on February 7, 2012. In the case of roofs supported by metal beams, after extended use, it is typical for the beams to loosen, warp, or otherwise deform, as a result of which the roof becomes caved in, and leaks may result. In the case of roofs supported by steel girders, the girders are typically enclosed in a weather shed for protection, and at least one or more of the girders is typically supported on steel posts that are embedded into the ground or pavement. These steel posts and girders are expensive and represent a substantial weight penalty in any floor area that is supported by the roof. Accordingly, the use of such steel components is particularly undesirable in large buildings, such as convention centers, where the cost is particularly high and the weight penalty is particularly disadvantageous.
